English commerce and English shopkeepers penetrated to the uttermos corners of the globe, and fattened on the possessions of the unsophisticated barbarans on whom they descended. But The City of Sydney carried a mail from attention to the party, and traveling was within a few years other nations have spoils. Even such uncommercial countries as France and Italy have been attacked by the colonial fever, and Germany in particular has entered the field as a serious rival. And the Germans go into the contest with all the fervor of new converts, and with even more than English phlegm and stubbornness. It is Saxon against Anglo-Saxon, with the odds in favor of the parent stock. All through the east, in Mexico and in other new markets German traders and German goods are pushing their way into favor at he expense of the English. And now comes a startled cry from Stanley that the Teutons are carrying all before them in the Congo region, driving out the English, who do not even make a stout stand or retreat in good order. If this continues we may have to change our theories about English becoming the universal language, owing to the spread of its trade, and substitute the German ongue as the world's voice of the future. -New York Commercial Advertiser.
